is a modification of the tanning process-Alum is made to do the work of part of the bark, or sometimes is used by itself. The skin is at once submitted to the action of the alum before putrefaction has commenced, or it will fail to effect the change required .-As soon, therefore, as the hair can be removed by the lime process, the skins are washed and cleansed, and are then placed in brau and water, after which they are ready for the alum. A bath of alumand salt is now prepared at a temperature of about one hundred and ninety degrees, in which the skins are placed for about nine or ten minutes. They are next taken out and the water sale by [ap 4] ROBERT BELL. tes. They are next taken out and the water sale by is thickened with the volk of eggs and wheat flour, forming a kind of paste, with which the skins are coated and then dried. The subsequent processes vary according as the leather is required for gloves or for other purposes. The chamois and the buff leather are dressed in a different manner, nor are they made of the skins of the animals from which they have derived their names, but from the sheep and ox. These leathers are very slightly tanned indeed, and are then dressed with oil, which is afterwards fulled and scoured out so as to remove any sensation of grease which they might otherwise communicate to the hand. True morocco leather is the skin of the goat tanned and dried, and may be known from its imitations by the veins on the inside, which are very well marked in the real skin and deficient in that of sheep. The dye always shows these veins in the darker shade, and makes them in this way very manifest. A vast proportion of the skins sold as morocco leather are those of the sheep; and a still worse imitation is now sold, which has no leather whatever in its composition, but is a varnish spread on a stout linen or cotton cloth, and then stamped in the same way as the imitation sheep skin. Russian leather is the skin of the horse or calf tanned with the bark of the birch, which gives it that the attacks of insects.

A STRANGE WORLD.

The following is the closing passage of an eloquent address that was recently delivered by the Hon. A. B. Longstreet, the President of the South Carolina College, to the Graduating Class:-

You are embarking upon a strange world, my young friends. It banished Aristides, poisoned Socrates, murdered Cicero, and crucified the Lord of Glory. The spirit of Themistocles, of Melitus, of Anthony and Caiaphas is still in the world-greatly subdued and law bound, to be sure, but not extinguished. You may expect, therefore, at times, to be depressed by your rivals, condemned for your patriotism, and tormented for your benefactions; to have your confidence abused, your integrity derided, and to suffer a thousand impositions in smaller matters—from those from whom you had a right to expect better things. These are hard things to bear, say you. They are so, my young friends, and you will never bear them as you should, unless you take the good book for your guide, and look only to its author for your benefactions; to have your confidence should, unless you take the good book for your guide, and look only to its author for supplies of strength sufficient for your trial. Do this, and all will be well at last. With that chart in your hand now launch your barque upon the troubled ocean of life; and when the squalls strike you, be at least as prudent as the common sailor, and be found hard

REASON FOR MARRYING A DUMB WOMAN .-A man named Thomas Galt was married yesterday, by Justice Hanselman, to Sarah Jane Anderson, a mute. Some curiosity was excited by the fact of his marrying a woman who could not speak, and a constable asked him the cause of his doing so. Galt answered, that he had two wives already, and they gave him no rest by reason of their talking ceaselessly, and complaining and scolding from morning till night. Both had died, and now as he was forty years old, and desirous of having a little peace for the remainder of his life, he had determined to select a dumb woman .- Cincinnati Enquirer.
